

I believe deregulating the number of stations that a given company can own is a terrible idea. If, for instance, Clear Channel networks winds up owning all of the radio stations in the united states, then we have a very big problem. New and creative music will not be featured without the backing of large recording corporations, which is an increasingly difficult thing to achieve.....

I'm sure you've heard this all before. How the media can't be owned, especially in providing the news, freedom of speech, ect.... So I'll leave it at that.

I think having a variety of corporations running the nations media is healthy and I am opposed to the changes being proposed.

Thank you,

John Hanson
